

CANADA

Instagram post of smiling Edmonton police officers posing with detained man to be investigated: EPS

By Phil Heidenreich · Global News

Posted June 3, 2020 6:34 pm Updated June 4, 2020 4:53 pm

A photo posted to Instagram that shows two smiling police officers holding a man being detained will now be investigated, the Edmonton Police Service told Global News on Wednesday. Global News has slightly altered the Instagram post in an attempt to better conceal the man's identity. Screenshot of Instagram post, supplied by Tom Engel

-A A+

A photo posted to Instagram that shows two smiling police officers holding a man being detained will now be investigated, the Edmonton Police Service told Global News on Wednesday.

Instagram post of smiling Edmonton police officers posing with detained man to be investigated: EPS

Instagram

mike_roblin

18 likes

mike_roblin This fine young man was so thrilled with the service we provided him he wanted to commemorate the moment with a picture. Just kidding, he was so high he thought he was on Mars... #summertimepolicing #dontdodrugskids

A photo posted to Instagram that shows two smiling police officers holding a man being detained will now be investigated, the Edmonton Police Service told Global News on Wednesday. Global News has slightly altered the Instagram post in an attempt to better conceal the man's identity. Screenshot of Instagram post, supplied by Tom Engel

Calgary

Police 'Valencrimes' posts mock people who aren't yet convicted, criminal defence lawyer says

One CPS constable said majority of Calgarians approve of the posts

Sarah Rieger • CBC News • Posted: Feb 16, 2020 6:00 AM MT | Last Updated: February 17

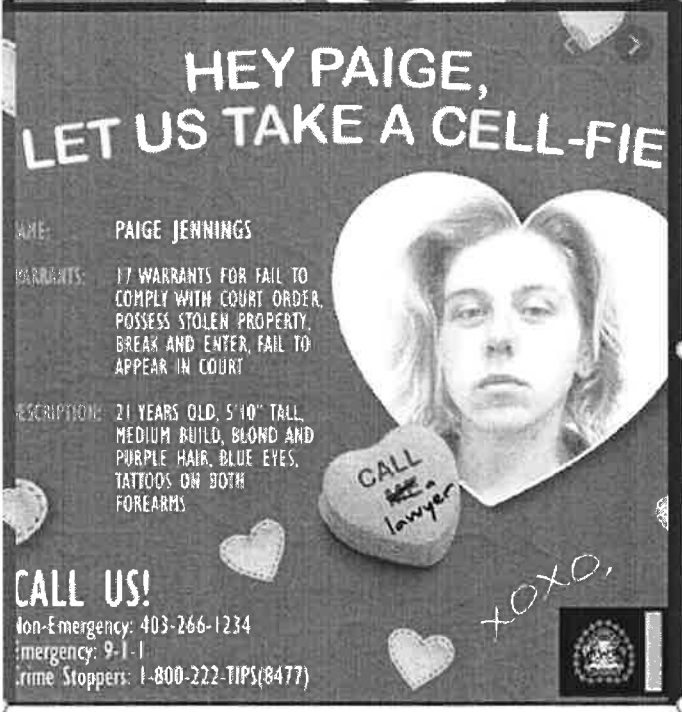

Calgary police removed a social media campaign which featured suspects wanted on warrants in punny Valentine's Day cards. "We're not fooled by the rocks that you got, you're still Jenny from the (cell) block," this card reads, referencing a Jennifer Lopez song. (Terri Trembath/CBC)

62 comments

A criminal defence lawyer is criticizing a Valentine's Day social media campaign run by Calgary police, saying the tone of the posts run contrary to the service's stated core values.

Every week, Calgary police post outstanding warrants on social media, asking the public for tips.

On Friday, police tweeted a series of "Valencrimes," posting Valentine's for each wanted person.

Constable Mark Smith

Follow

16 February at 17:18

What do you think friends?

Too far, or a good creative way of catching wanted criminals?

Or has the world gone completely mad where no campaigns will ever be possible in trying to arrest people!

*The only real negative feedback I saw was on Twitter from anonymous accounts or accounts from outside Canada

CBC.CA

Police 'Valencrimes' posts mock people who aren't yet convicted, criminal defence lawyer says

Calgary Police
FOUNDATION

News

Video Shows Cop Dragging Student Facedown During Wellness Check

A UBC nursing student is suing the RCMP after she was violently detained during a mental health call.

By Mack Lamoureux

June 23, 2020, 9:59am; Updated on June 23, 2020, 10:00am SHARE TWEET Snap

RCMP CPL. LACY BROWNING STEPS ON THE BACK OF MONA WANG'S HEAD DURING A WELLNESS CHECK. PHOTO VIA SCREENSHOT.

A recently released video shows an RCMP officer dragging a handcuffed woman face down across the floor, stepping on her head, and pulling her by her hair during a wellness call.

The surveillance camera footage is from an incident in January and was released in a related lawsuit filed against the RCMP. The video was first posted online by Castranet on Monday.

The footage shows Cpl. Lacy Browning of

MORE LIKE THIS

News

Video Shows Quebec Police Pulling Black Man Out of Car by His Hair

ANYA ZOLEOZOWSKI
96.05.20

News

Cops Face 'Legitimacy Crisis' as Social Media Flooded With Their Terrible Behaviour

ANYA ZOLEOZOWSKI
96.04.20

crime

Canada's Tow Truck 'Cartels' Blamed for Multiple Deaths and Arsons

MACK LAMOREUX
06.16.20

News

Toronto Cop Charged With

News

BC RCMP Boss Apologizes to Woman Dragged by Cop During Wellness Check

Chief Superintendent Brad Haugli said he's "deeply concerned" over video showing an officer stepping on the head of a UBC student and pulling her hair.

By Marisha Krishnan

July 3, 2020, 12:49pm SHARE TWEET Snap

IN JANUARY, RCMP CPL. LACY BROWNING STEPPED ON THE HEAD OF UBC STUDENT MONA WANG DURING A WELLNESS CHECK. PHOTO VIA SCREENSHOT

An RCMP superintendent has apologized to the woman a police officer dragged facedown in handcuffs during a wellness check.

In a press conference Thursday, Chief Superintendent Brad Haugli, commander of the B.C. RCMP's southeast district, said he wants a nurse to be paired up with a police officer at every mental health call.

MORE LIKE THIS

News

NDP Leader Jagmeet Singh Tossed From Parliament For Calling Another Politician Racist

ANYA ZOLEDZIEWSKI
06.18.20

News

Toronto Construction Workers Keep Finding Nooses Hanging At Their Sites

MAX LAMOREUX
07.02.20

News

Dashcam Video Shows Police Jump Tackling, Punching Indigenous Chief

ANYA ZOLEDZIEWSKI
06.12.20

News

Canadian Cops Keep Killing People During Wellness and Mental Health Calls

At least five people have died during mental health calls or wellness checks by police since April. All five were Black, Indigenous, or people of colour.

By Mack Lamoureux

June 22, 2020, 6:00am; Updated on June 25, 2020, 7:39am SHARE TWEET Snap

Chantel Moore seemed pleased to have just moved to Edmundston, New Brunswick.

In a June 1 Facebook post, she wrote, “A year ago, I came to Edmundston for 6 weeks... now a year later I’m back from BC and settled into my nice, new place.” The same day, Moore, 26, had a coffee with her mom, helped her plant a greenhouse, and followed that up by going around to find some “hidden gems” in her new town. After another day of gardening with her family, Moore finally got her wifi set up, jokingly naming it “chanimal.”

Two days later, a police officer shot and killed Moore, a Nuu-chah-nulth mother of one, during a wellness check.

Quebec’s independent police investigation agency, Bureau des enquetes independante, is investigating the shooting.

Judith Sayers, the president of the Nuu-chah-nulth Tribal Council and spokesperson for the family, said Moore’s family is struggling to understand what happened but the information they’re getting from police is sparse. Sayers said Moore was “a typical Nuu-chah-nulth woman” and, if what police say is true, is shocked “a well-trained police officer couldn’t have just dealt with (Moore) easily or tried to de-escalate the situation.”

News

Canadian Cops Keep Killing People During Wellness and Mental Health Calls