The Calgary Agenda-Setting Workshop explored the meaning of resilience ...

What is resilience?

Cohesive communities: "We need to think not as taxpayers but as citizens."

Empathy, support, and kindness: "Kindness and empathy are our greatest strengths."

Purposeful planning for the future:

"Learning from our past, and the experiences and cycles of people within this community."

"Never mistake the desire for compassion, kindness, mercy, love, and humanity for weakness. It is strength." - Mayor Nenshi

... its application to the Calgary context...

Participants prioritized shocks and stresses ...

Economic stress and uncertainty

Chronic economic uncertainty given the lack of economic diversification vulnerability to commodity price fluctuations

Weather and climate change

Severe storms and rainfall/river flooding are the most likely and with the highest impact for Calgary

Lack of social cohesion and inequity

Marginalized populations and weakening social ties

... discussed interdependencies between these shocks and stresses.

Vicious cycle between declining infrastructure investment and reduced ability to invest in infrastructure

Economic stagnation in certain districts (e.g., downtown Calgary), leading to a reduced incentive to invest in these communities

Groups that are more vulnerable to public health shocks (like the fentanyl crisis) are becoming increasingly marginalized, further reducing their access to services

... and ideas of what Calgary could do about them

Strengthen communities' own capacity to deal with shocks and stresses themselves

Improve broad education and awareness around resilience at all levels

Build stronger formal governance policies and improved ability to execute on plans

"We often have great plans and feel like we are heading in a good direction, so we just need to ensure we are able to follow through on these plans"
