True community planning requires balancing growth with capacity. Approving additional storeys without addressing the cascading impacts on traffic, parking, and green space places an undue burden on the neighborhood. Zoning bylaws exist to provide predictability and protect the established character of our community. Disregarding these frameworks for isolated high-density projects undermines the community's vision for itself. It is crucial that we do not trade the livability and cohesion of our neighborhood for a short-term increase in tax base or developer profits!
